first."

- The Marathon Mystery A Story of Manhattan

By BURTON E. STEVENSON Author of "The Holladay Case"

Copyright, 1904, by Henry Holt and Company

CHAPTER XXVI.

HOMAS led the way through the hall and up the stair. "Which room will you look at first, sir?" he asked. "Let us see Mr. Tremaine's room

"Very well, sir," said Thomas, and opened a door and stood aside to let us pass

There was nothing at all extraordinary about the room. It was large, well lighted, well ventilated, well furnished-just the sort of bedroom one would naturally expect to find in a luxurious country house.

Godfrey cast a glance about it; then he went to one of the windows, opened it and stepped out upon the balcony He walked along the balcony to the end where the heavy creepers were, took a look at them and finally came back to the window.

"That's all," he said, as he stepped through into the room. "Of course l didn't expect to find anything here; out friend is much too clever to be caught napping that way. Thomas, I suppos this table is just where it was when Mr. Tremaine had the room?" "Yes, sir,"

Godfrey sat down at it, measuring the distance from it to the window.

"Lester," he said, "I wish you'd go out and come up the walk and see if you can see me sitting here."

I ran down the stairs and did as he directed, but could catch not a glimpse fully in an inner pocket. After all, "Well?" he called down, coming to the open window. "I can't see you at all," I said.

"I thought so. Come up again." He was sitting again at the table when I opened the door. "Now, take a look at it, Lester," he about it; the bed had not been made. said. "You'll see that the table is so far away from the window that it's

Godfrey opened it and stepped out upon the balcony quite impossible for any one on the ground outside to see the person sitting at it. Yet Drysdale stated distinctly that he saw Tremaine sitting at the table writing when he came back from that mysterious walk. What would you argue from that?"

"That Tremaine had moved the table nearer to the window.

"And why should he do that?" "To get a better light, perhaps," I ventured.

"He might have done it in the daytime, to get a better light, but at night he would get a much worse one over there by the window than here. The lights, you'll observe, hang from the center of the ceiling."

"Then he did it," I said, "in order that he might be seen from outside." "That's it. Not only that he might be seen, but that Drysdale might see him. I wonder if this is the kind of paper he wrote on?"

We keep a supply of it in all th' guest rooms, sir," volunteered Thomas. Godfrey took it up and looked at it It was a plain white linen of good quality, with the word "Edgemere" embossed in blue at the top. There were also on the table pens, an inkstand and two or three blotters. He turned the blotters over, but only one of them showed any sign of having been used, and the marks on it were very faint, yet they seemed to interest Godfrey. He bent over them with puz zled face. Then he got out a little maguifying glass and studied them

"Lester," he said, at last, "I wish you'd take a look at this," and he pushed the blotter and glass toward me. "What do you make of it?"

I gazed through the glass at the marks, but for a moment could make nothing of them. Then they resolved themselves into a string of letters marching backward, fairly distinct at one end, but fading away to nothing-

"Somebody seems to have been scrib bling a lot of disconnected letters on a plece of paper," I said, at last. "I can't make out any words. The letters seem to be mostly B's and G's-yes, and here's an I."

"Thomas," said Godfrey, "will you go down and ask Mr. Delroy if he has a sample of Mr. Tremaine's handwriting. and, if so, if he will let us see it for a

Thomas went out instantly and looked at Godfrey in surprise.

-Bring or send us your JOB "You think those marks have som WORK; we do it nicely. value?" I asked. quickly.

thread the bits of evidence which had seemed to Godfrey so important-the bottle, the scratches on the wall, the coat rack, the broken cane, the note; but for the life of me I could see no connection between them. Yet I knew there must be or Godfrey would not Godfrey drummed absently on the now be walking up and down the room able and stared out of the window. with a face so beaming, so triumphant. "I don't know," he answered, "but "Miss Croydon will see you at once, in an investigation of this kind no sir," announced Thomas from the

these marks at all; even if be did, they probably have no significance. But in make sure; and, besides, I'd like to see a sample of his handwriting, just for its own sake-the handwriting of a man like that ought to be interesting. Ah.

"Here's a letter, sir," said Thomas.

Godfrey opened it and glanced at the

"He's a good penman," he said; "see

Lester," and he handed me the sheet but it's quite a different hand from he one on the blotter-much broade and more masculine-just such a hand

as one would naturally expect a man

He explained it again for a moment then folded it up and handed it back to

"Perhaps Mr. Delroy will want it

"Now, let us see Mr. Drysdale's

As he got up from the table I no ticed that he still held the blotter in his hand, and I saw him place it care

then, he did attach some importance

The room which had been occupied by Drysdale was the counterpart of Tremaine's, but it was in great disorder. An open trunk stood in the middle of the floor, with clothing strewn

"We was ordered not t' do anything toward settin' this room to rights," ex

the coroner sent us word we might.

It was evident that Drysdale had been packing very hastily when he was interrupted by the arrival of the officers. The clothing which was in the trunk had been crammed in care lessly-though, of course, that might have been done by the coroner after

"Drysdale evidently didn't spend much time in bed that night," observed

Godfrey and indicated a pile of cigarette stubs heaped high on an asl tray on the table. "He must have had some knotty problem to wrestle with

He walked slowly about the room looking at everything keenly, but touching nothing. He stood gazing at the bed for a long time. Then he

"Here's the diary," he said, picking up a little book which lay there. "So Heffelbower didn't get it. Well, I guess I'd better see he doesn't have could see how it tempted him. Per haps here lay the very key which he had been seeking in vain! But in a moment he slipped it unopened into

"A man is a fool to make promises, he observed, with a wry smile, and sat down at the table. "Hello, what's this?" he added suddenly, and, stoop

ing, he fished from the wastebasket

It was a cane certainly of at least ordinary strength, and yet it had been broken into half a dozen pieces and Whistling softly to himself, Godfrey surveyed it a moment; then he bent over the basket and examined the re mainder of its contents piece by piece

There were scraps of letters, a torn

He sprang to his feet with a cry of

"I've found it?" he cried, his face

"Found what?" I questioned, more

"Ah, Lester," he continued more calmly as he smoothed it out carefully

on the table, "this takes a lot of con ceit out of me. Had I been really clever I'd have deduced the existence

the room. As it is, it's luck-pure luck! I'm glad to win on any terms but I'd rather win by scientific deduc tion. C. Auguste Dupin would have come straight upstairs, walked straight to that basket and selected unerringly

this sheet of paper; he would have known that it was there, while I-well,

one can only do one's best, and this point was a little too fine for me. Take

It was a sheet of the ordinary Edge mere note paper. Across it two lines

Be at the pergola at 9. If I am lat-

"Oh, don't you see, Lester, it's the key to the whole problem? It's the light we've been looking for-with our eyes shut. And to think that instead of coming straight here for it I should have stumbled about in the dark for so long! It's the only possible explanation, and yet I didn't think of it. It was inevitable from the first, and yet

I couldn't see it. It disgusts me with myself-it's what I get for being so cocked up over finding that bottle down there. Even after I saw that He had taken out a card, and as he

"Here," he said to Thomas, "take spoke he wrote a rapid sentence on it this to Miss Croydon at once, please."

blotter I didn't guess it."

"Weli," I faltered; "well"-

a look at it."

were written:

wait for me.

of this message long before I entered and more astonished, for Godfrey was envelope, a crumpled sheet of paper-triumph and waved it in the air.

beaming. "I've found it Lester!"

usually master of his emotions.

hurled into the basket.

beside him the fragments of a cane.

plained Thomas apologetically,

He ain't sent no word yet."

searching it.

to need so many.

He

his pocket.

turned again to the table.

here is Thomas."

like Tremaine to write point is too small to be important. threshold, and we followed him to the We've got to examine everything farther end of the corridor, where he veigh everything, pile up every little tapped at a door. A voice bade us atom of evidence, if we expect to tip enter. the scale in our direction. It's very probable that Tremaine never made

She was standing by a window, looking out across the waters of the bay, and she did not turn for an instantnot, indeed, until Godfrey had closed any event it won't do any harm to the door carefully behind him. I have seen few women more regal, more magnificent, yet there was about herin her face, in the droop of her figuresuch an air of utter misery, of exquisite suffering, that, after the first moment, one forgot to admire her in the desire to be of service.

CHAPTER XXVII.

was trembling with eagerness. I endeavored to string upon a common in a low voice.

"Yes, Miss Croydon," replied Godfrey, more gently perhaps than he had intended to speak. "This is Mr. Lester," he added, "who has been engaged to defend Mr. Drysdale." She acknowledged the introduction with the faintest of bows. "I hope Mr. Lester will be success ful," she said, in the coldest of tones.

One would have thought her a mere chance acquaintance of my client. I saw Godfrey looking at her with searching eyes, and his face hardened. "We mean to be successful," be said curtly. "You may as well ask us to sit down, Miss Croydon, because our business here will take some time, and I am sure it will tire you to stand."

"Really," she began; then her eye met his, burning with meaning. "Oh, very well," she said faintly and sank into the chair nearest her.

"Now, Miss Croydon," Godfrey continued in the same coldly imperative tone, "I latend to speak to you bluntly and directly. We have beaten about the bush too long already. I see that you are not inclined to deal frankly with us. You have not been frank with us from the first. You have sought to blind us, to throw us off the track. Therefore I shall tell you what we already know in order that you may realize how useless it is for you to try to hold us off. We're going to see that the guilty man is punished, not for this crime alone, but also for that other one at the Marathon, of which you were the only witness. You shall not be permitted to keep him from justice a day longer. In the first place, we know that this man Tremaine inveigled your sister into a schoolgirl elopement and marriage; she was rescued from him; she thought him dead; she mar ried Delroy; came to New York; Tre maine followed her and attempted the extortion of blackmail; you met him at the Marathon; while you were talking Thompson interfered and Tremsine killed him, escaping before the officers arrived. You did not know Thompson but you saw Simmonds and me take out his pocketbook. You heard me read a line or two from one of a packet of clippings we found there, and while clippings from the body and hid them under the edge of the carpet"-She breathed a long sigh and sat erect again.

"Ah," she said, with a little smile, "I was beginning to fear you, all that seemed so supernatural. But now I see where your information came

"It is correct, then?" asked Godfrey. "Yes," she answered. "Yes."

Godfrey leaned back in his chair, with a long sign of relief. He had won the battle

"Miss Croydon," he said, "I'm going to reward you for your frankness by telling you something which I had in tended to keep secret awhile longer, just to punish you. Your sister never was the wife of Tremaine and has nothing whatever to fear from him. He has no hold on her at all. She has never been anybody's wife but Mr Delrov's."

She was staring at him with widely opened eyes, her hands clasped above her heart.

"Oh, if it were really so!" she cried "If it were really so!"

"It is so," repeated Godfrey, and took a little yellow envelope from hi pocket. "Read this." And he unfolded after we had settled the other. So a sheet of paper and held it toward | Went. He opened the door for me

She took it with trembling hand and read the message written upon it, but seemingly without understanding it. "It is a cable," he explained, "from the Record's correspondent at Dieppe

Your pardon, Lester," be added, with a fleeting smile; "I forgot to show it to you on the trip out. Please read it aloud, Miss Croydon."

"The widow of Victor Charente," sh read in a low voice, "died here Feb 21, 1901. Had never married again.' She looked up, her brows still knitted 'Well?" she asked. "Well," said Godfrey, "Victor Cha rente is the real name of Tremaine. He married that girl many years before he met your sister. She was his legal wife. Your sister never was, She was never the legal wife of any one except Richard Delroy."

She understood now, and the glad tears burst forth unrestrained. In deed, she made no effort to restrain them, but only rocked back and forth pressing the message against her heart.

"Thank God!" she sobbed. "Thank God!" And then she started up from her chair. "I must tell her," she said, "at once. If you knew how she has suffered! She must not be left in that cruel position an instant longer." "Very well," agreed Godfrey. "We will wait for you here."

She disappeared through a door at the farther end of the room, but in a moment came softly back again.

"Your sister never was the wife of Tro

"You wished to see me?" she asked, wait until she wakes. What a joyful awaking it will be!" And she sat down again. She wiped away the lears, but her eyes were still shining. Godfrey gazed at her with a face full of emotion.

> "Now, Miss Croydon," he began, "you've told me that my theory's correct, but there are three or four points I should like you to help me clear up, if you will."

> "I shall be glad to if I can," she answered, and smiled at him, her eyes brimming again. "You've lifted such a load from me, Mr. Godfrey, that I'd do almost anything to show my gratitude."

> Why, looking at her, did his face change-soften, harden? Why did his hands tremble so? It was over in an instant; yet I had caught a glimpse of his secret. I understood.

> "It was nothing," he said. "I was glad to do it. I was deeply pleased when that message came this morn-

> "You've been kinder to me than I deserved," she said; and I more than half agreed with her. How, with his eyes before her, could she fail to understand? Perhaps she did understand. I was never sure.

> "In the first place, then, Miss Croydon," he went on, in a different tone, "how did your father succeed in getting your sister away from Tremaine?"

> "They had gone to Paris," she answered, "and in two or three days Edith had awakened from her dream She saw something in the man which terrified her and she wrote a pitful letter to father who went over to Paris at once and the went over to buying the same off. Father paid him 50,000 frases, I believe. Perhaps it was the fact that he knew he was not really Edith's husband, that he himself had committed a crime, which made him take it. He agreed to leave the country, and in the following December he wrote father that he was about to sail for Martinique in a ship called the Centaur. He said he intended to buy a plantation at Martinique and make that his home. In February we learned that the Centaur had been lost, with all on board. After eight years it seeme certain that he was dead, and Edit felt free to marry again."

"Was Mr. Delroy informed of this early indiscretion? "Certainly, and forgave it, as any good man would." "Pardon me for asking the question Miss Croydon; but It was necessary When was it you first learned that Tremaine was still allve?" "One night nearly two months ag Edith brought his letter to me. She was wild, distracted, ready to kill herself-that is what I have feared every day since. She loves Mr. Delroy, Mr. Godfrey, and yet she believed herself the wife of another man. He demand ed that she meet him in that apartmen house. I knew she could not bear such a meeting, and yet he must be seen I offered to go in her stead. I had some wild idea of appealing to his better nature, of persuading him"-

She stopped, silenced by her own "That, of course, would not have altered the fact that your sister was his wife." observed Godfrey.

"No. That was the terrible part of it nothing could alter that. There must, of course, be a separation, but we thought we would solve that problen I had never seen him, and I confess his appearance and manner were not at all what I expected. He did not look in the least like a scoundrel, or did he act like one. He listened to me with attention and seeming respect. He even appeared moved. Oh, I know now what a hypocrite he was. I know that he was laughing at me; that he was planning something deeper, more villainous. I had brought $1,200 with me-all that we could gather together at that moment-and I pressed it upor him, urging him to take it and go away and we would send him more. He pre tended to refuse the money, to protest that that was not in the least what he wanted, but I compelled him to take it. And just as I was hoping that I had prevailed with him the door of the bedroom opened and a horrible drunken man staggered out. "'Well, Vic,' he cried, 'so this is th' gal, is it? She's a likely piece. I wouldn't give her up, Vic, no, not fer ten thousand'-"Go back to bed, you drunker brute? cried Tremaine, and took him roughly by the arm. "But the other shook him off.

"'Don't lay your hands on me, Vic!" he cried. 'Don't dare lay your hands on me!

"I saw a very devil spring into Tremaine's face. He looked about him for some weapon and picked up a piece of pipe that lay beside the radiator. Thompson saw the action and lurched heavily toward him. "'Goin' t' use that on me, Vic?' h made a pass at Tremaine and tried to snatch the pipe away. You try it on. an' I'll blow your game like I did once before down at Sydney."

"He struck at Tremaine again, but the latter oprang away and in an instant had brought the pipe down upon his head. Thompson fell like a log; Tremaine's face for a second time; he nest." snatched out a revolver: I dimly understood what was coming-indeed, I had my own revolver in my hand, and I fired at him, but my shot went wild, while his"-

She stopped and buried her face in her hands, overcome for the moment by the terrible spectacle her words had evoked.

She controlled herself by an effort, took down ber hands-"He put his pistol away and stepped over very close to me. "'Miss Croydon,' he said rapidly, 'It will be well for you to say you did not know me. I have committed no crime; he was the aggressor; what I did was done in self defense. One thing more me: I shall never bother her again; I promise you that.' "He was gone in an instant, and then the janitor came and you and the detectives."

Godfrey nodded thoughtfully. "That supplies the motive, Lester," he said. "I have felt that my explanation of the crime was not quite adequate. But it was not only desire for revenge that urged Tremaine on; it was also the knowledge that Thompson knew of his first marriage and threatened with a word to wreck his plans a second time."

"Yes," I agreed and sat silent, pondering the story.

"Why did you take the clippings, Miss Croydon?" asked Godfrey after a

"From what you read of them I suspected how vitally they concerned my sister. That was a secret, I felt, which must be kept at any hazard. It was done without consideration, on the spur of the moment, or I should never have had the courage to do it at all." "And why did you hide them under the carpet? She laughed outright. The load was lifted. She was fast becoming her usual self.

"I had a wild idea that you were going to search me. I saw that loose place in the carpet the instant I aros with the clippings in my hand. Once I had put them there I had no chance at all to get them again." Godfrey nodded.

"You tried to get them the day after the inquest, dldn't you?" "Yes; but the janitor was so afraid of me that he wouldn't even let me go upstairs." "And there weren't any papers?" "No; that was a lie. I saw I must invent one-that I must offer some explanation of my presence there." "Did Tremaine keep his promise?" "Not to bother my sister? Yes; he mentioned it again only to assure me that the past was derd-that he would never revive it." "But how could you admit his presence here?" "How could we prevent it? It was

Mr. Delroy who brought him. weren't strong enough to tell him the whole story." "You mean you told him part of it? "There has been a virtual separation ever since Mr. Tremaine appeared." Godfrey paused reflectively. "Why were you so agitated," he con tinued finally, "when you were asked to identify Jimmy the Dude at the in-

"Because I did identify him."

"You did?"

"Yes-us the man I had seen talking to the janitor in the lower hall. Le me explain, Mr. Godfrey. When I was asked suddenly for a description of the murderer, I was taken aback; I endeavored to think, to collect myselfand I remembered the man I had passed in the hall. Without stopping to consider-wishing only to disarm suspicion-I described him roughly as I remembered him. When I was con fronted with him at the inquest next day, I instantly realized what I had done-I had implicated an innocent man-and it turned me a little faint for

"Had you ever met him?" "Met him?" she repeated in surprise Why, no."

"But he seemed to know you." "Oh"-and she laughed again-"I had a letter from him next day, a letter filled with gratitude, touching even. It seems that my sister and I had helped out knowing it while he was away"-"At Sing Sing. He's the most expert burglar in New York, but he's got his | isn't it?"

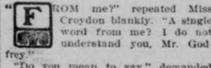

good points too. Witness his taking Thompson home that night." "Yes; he wanted to do anything he could to help me. I intend to look up Jimmy.

"Do. If you can reform him the New York police force will be mighty grateful."

"I'm going to try," she said. And I rather envied Jimmy. Godfrey leaned back in his chair, with a sigh of satisfaction. "I think that clears up that affair pretty well," he said, "and that brings us to the second and more serious one And first, Miss Croydon, I want to ask you if you think it was just the right thing to let them march Jack Drysdale off to prison when a single word from you might have saved him?"

F ROM me?" repeated Miss CHAPTER XXVIII.

"Do you mean to say," demanded Godfrey with emphasis, "that you do not know where Mr. Drysdale was Monday night; that you were not yourself the cause of his leaving the She was staring at him with distend

"I the cause!" she repeated hoarsely

after a moment. "Mr. Godfrey, I will tell you something of which I had determined never to speak. When he left the house that evening he deliberately broke an appointment he had made "She is asleep," she said. "I will asked. 'You'd better try it.' And be ed for. He had happened to hear Mr. with me-an appointment he had pray-

me. In short"-she hesitated and then he was worrying." proceeded steadily with raised head-"I may as well tell the whole truth. Since the evening of that first tragedy Mr. Tremaine has been persecuting me with his attentions. At the time I drew up before the hotel. As we enthought them merely lusuiting; I see | tered the office I saw the proprietor then that fiendish look flashed irio now that he may have been in ear cast a quick glance at a little fat man,

"I don't in the least doubt that he was in earnest," agreed Godfrey. "Mr. Drysdale, then, overheard him ask you to be his wife?"

"Yes; just that." "But he also heard you refuse, no doubt?" "Oh, yes," she said, smiling and coloring a little, "he heard me refuse in the most positive way, but my refusal provoked Mr. Tremaine to an intemperance of language which Mr. Drysdale resented and which he thought I should have resented too. He demanded that I explain to him Mr. Tremaine's position, and I promised to do so on the very evening he-he stayed away from the house. His staying away offended me deeply." -your sister has nothing to fear from

Godfrey had listened with intent eyes and a quick nod from time to

"There is only one point lacking," he sald. "Did Tremaine know of your intention to tell Drysdale the story?" "Yes; he even charged me with that intention." "Ah, he had listened at a keyhole probably.

"He said that Mr. Drysdale himself had told him. I might add, Mr. God-frey, that I met Mr. Drysdale and the officers in the hall that morning as they were going away, and I implored him to tell them where he had been. He answered me with such insult and contempt that I thought he must be mad.

"And no wonder! You were playing at cross purposes. I presume, then, that it was not you who wrote Mr. Drysdale this note?" and he handed her the crumpled sheet of paper he had dale?" fished from Drysdale's wastebasket. She took it with trembling hand; already beginning to suspect, perhaps, what it contained. "'Be at the pergoln at 9," she read. "If I am late, wait for me. G." I certainly never wrote any such note asked. as that, Mr. Godfrey. Where did it come from?" "Is it in your handwriting?"

"Why, yes," she answered, looking at it more closely. "That is, it is something like. Oh! I begin to see!" she cried, and I saw her selzed with a sudden convulsive shuddering.

"Yes," said Godfrey, "It was a pretty plot. This note lured him from the house and kept bim away until the storm came up and he was forced to abandon the hope of meeting you. He concluded that you were playing with him. When he returned to the house he found that you had spent the even ing with Tremnine. Afterward, in his room, he did a number of violent and foolish things. Finally he determined to go away. He started to pack his belongings-and then, in the hall, you. as he thought, added insult to injury by asking him to tell" She stopped him with a wild gesture "Oh, I must see him?" she cried. "Something must be done"-

"Something shall be done," Godfrey assured her, rising. "The real culprit shall be in custody tonight." "The real culprit?" The words ar rested her attention.

"Who but Tremaine?" "Tremaine? But he was in the house, As you know, I talked with him for a

That is all, I think," said Godfrey. "One thing more, Mr. Godfrey," she said. "Do you think we'd better tell Mr. Delroy the story?

"Yes," answered Godfrey decidedly. "Tell him the whole story. That's always the best way and the safest. Remember, your lack of frankness has already cost one human life. Your t'e case petter myself, sir!" sister has incurred no guilt. She has committed no fault. Her husband will thanks at the compliment. have nothing to forgive."

"And the public? "The public? What has the public to do with it?"

"But I thought-you see-you"-"Oh, you thought I would write it up in the Record? I have no such inten tion, Miss Croydon. I shall let tha first tragedy rest. This second on will be enough-and, after all, Tremaine has only one life for the law to take."

"Pardon me," she said quickly, holding out her hand. "I see I have offended you. You must forgive me.' "Oh, I do," he said, taking her hand and smiling into her eyes-allowing his family-a mother and sister-with- himself a moment's reward. "Even a yellow journalist, Miss Croydon, has his reticences. That's hard to believe

"Not when one knows them," she answered, and opened the door for us. Thomas was waiting in the hall. "Anything else, sir?" he asked.

"No," said Godfrey. "We've finished here. Now let us have our trap.' We stopped a moment in the library to say goodby to Delroy. He came forward eagerly to meet us.

"Well?" he asked. "Can you clear "Yes," said Godfrey, "we can What's more, we will "Thank God!" and Delroy passed hi hand across his forehead. "This whole thing has been a sort of terrible night mare to me, Mr. Godfrey. I'm hoping that I may even yet wake up and find that it was all only a dream." Godfrey smiled a little bitterly.

"I'm afraid you won't do that, Mr Delroy," he said, "but, at least, I be lieve you'll find that in the end it will sweep a great unhappiness out of you life. And I'm sure that, with Mr. Lester's belp, I can clear Drysdale." Thomas came to tell us that our trap was waiting, and Deiroy went down the steps with us. "I hope to have you here some time under more favorable circumstances, he said, and shook us both warmly by the hand. Evening had come, and the darkness deepened rapidly as we drove back along the road to Babylon. "We can't get a train till 8:42," sald Godfrey, "so we'll have dinner at the hotel and then go around for a talk with our client. I think we have somnews that will cheer him up."

"It seemed to me," I observed, "that

Tremaine make certain proposals to it was not at all about his arrest that "It wasn't," agreed Godfrey. "That's what I meant." The lights of Babylon gleamed out ahead, and a few minutes later we

"Oh, I must see him!" she cried. with a round face, who had been leaning against the cigar stand and who immediately came forward to meet us.

"I am Coroner Heffelbower," he said, with an evident appreciation of his own importance. "I believe you are t'e gentlemen who represent Mr. Drys-

"Mr. Lester here, of Graham & Royce, will represent Mr. Drysdale," explained Godfrey, "I am merely one of his friends. "The inquest, I believe, is set for tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock?" I

"Yes, sir; t'ough we shall hardly get to t'e evidence before afternoon. morning will be spent in looking ofer t'e scene of t'e crime." "I understand," said Godfrey with studied artlessness, "that you have found the missing necklace." The coroner flushed a little. Evidently this was a sore subject.

"No, sir," he answered; "we haven't found it. I haf about come to t'e conclusion t'at Drysdale t'rew it into t'e pay." "But," I objected, "he'd hardly have committed a murder in order to gain

"He would if my t'eory iss right, sir," returned the coroner, with some spirit. "What is your theory?" I asked. "No matter, no matter." And he was possession of it only to throw it away."

fairly bloated with self importance. 'You will see tomorrow.' Godfrey was looking at him, his eves alight with mirth. "I see," he broke in. "Accept my compliments, Mr. Heffelbower, It is the only theory which fits the case. Don't you understand, Lester? Here's a young man of wealth, who deliberately goes out and kills a man, steals a necklace and throws It into the ocean. He attempts to establish noallbi; he refuses to answer questions; his room and breaks things; he insultsthe girl he's engaged to; quarrels with his best friend. Why, it's as plain as day! A man who would behave like that must be"-"Crazy!" cried the coroner, beaming with satisfaction. "I could not haf put And Godfrey gravely bowed his

[TO RE CONTINUED.]

Time for Disappearing. It was 10:30 by the cuckoo clock.

"Father," said the dear girl, "used to be a crack football player." "I-er-guess I'd better be going," rejoined the young man. "He's rather near-sighted, I believe, and might mistake me for the ball."-Chicago

Daily News. His Reason.

"He's a gentleman." "Nonsense! He's a snob."

"He always gives up his seat in a car to a woman." "That's because sitting down bags the knees of his trousers."-Cleveland

Hadn't Shaved in a Week. First Camper-I nate to go home, but I promised my wife I'd be back tonight. Second Ditto-Send her a picture of yourself as you are now; she'll want you to stay away as long as possible. -Detorit Free Press.

On the Stygian Ferry. Charon was observed in a state of collapse.

"That spirit actually wanted a rebate ticket," he exclaimed. Herewith the great master of transportation was completely flabbergast-

ed .- N. Y. Sun. First Airship Crank-Back from your trip to Mars, eh? Make any new discoveries? Second Airship Crank-No, except that the Milky Way is two-thirds water.-Chicago Daily News.

"My dear, I have a disappointment for you. You know the letter you gave me to mail?" "What? You forgot it?" "No. I mailed it."-Detroit Free Unexpected.

Truly Difficult. "This is a hard position," said the czar's fortune teller; "very hard."

-Washington Star.

"What's the trouble?" "I can't make up my mind whether I'm hired to be optimistic or reliable."